

DEMOCRACY AND ETHNIC FAVORITISM: EVIDENCE FROM AFRICA^{*}

HUSSAIN HADAH[†]

AUGUST 23, 2023

Word Count: 6,025 words

ABSTRACT

What is the effect of democracy on ethnic favoritism? I estimate the relationship between co-ethnicity and five outcomes of public good provision – education, infant health, wealth, access to clean drinking water and access to electricity – using data from twenty-one African countries. Following previous research, I use variation in co-ethnicity across ethnic groups and over time. I first estimate the relationship between these five outcomes and co-ethnicity in the full sample and then split the analysis between anocracies and democracies. I find mixed evidence of ethnic favoritism in the full sample. I find more evidence of co-ethnic targeting when comparing within democracies only and within anocracies only.

Keywords: Ethnic favoritism; democracy; dictatorships; institutions.

JEL Classifications: D3, O1, O2.

^{*}I am so grateful to Willa Friedman for her advice, comments and support. I thank Nathan Canen, Aimee Chin, German Cubas, Chinhui Juhn, Vikram Maheshri and the participants of the Empirical Microeconomics Workshop at the University of Houston for their comments and feedback. Abhi Basvoju provided excellent research assistance.

[†]Department of Economics, Tulane University, 6823 St. Charles Ave., New Orleans, LA 70118, United States (e-mail: hhadah@tulane.edu).